

SUMMARY

Kenya Big Dream successfully launched in the target communities of Baringo and West Pokot, gaining traction to reduce violence against children while operating in the midst of the COVID-19 pandemic.

The project pivoted its activities quickly as a result of the pandemic’s harmful secondary effects on child protection. This included adding new activities, such as raising mass awareness through radio. We reached 459,695 listeners through talk shows on two local FM stations. The shows emphasized protecting children from female genital mutilation (FGM), child marriage, child labor, and other forms of abuse. Although this activity was via indirect contact, the radio listenership surpassed the target for participants reached directly for the entire five-year project. Other activities:

- 45 faith leaders were trained on Celebrating Families, which emphasizes healthy relationships and good parenting skills based on a biblical model of forgiveness, love, and compassion. Leaders also learned how to train their congregations.

- 430 children in three primary schools received life skills training from their teachers right before schools closed due to COVID.
- 900 vulnerable families took part in the project’s cash transfer program to mitigate the secondary effects of COVID-19, using this cash to boost their small businesses and meet food needs.
- 300 families identified by their communities each were supported with two goats to improve their herds’ breed and produce a reliable milk source.

Despite COVID’s harmful effects, the project pivoted quickly in its first year to reach the most vulnerable and mitigate FGM and early marriage.

“Now, I work so hard to change people’s mind in my community so they can save our children and girls from [FGM]. I also want to protect them from the anguish and pain that I feel when I remember the girls that I may have harmed unknowingly.”

—Paka, a former practitioner of FGM in Baringo County

PROGRESS ON CORE ACTIVITIES

Trained 675 members of AACs, our key partners in child protection work, to provide community oversight on FGM, child marriage, and other child-rights violations.

Provided 7,600 girls with dignity kits, which include sanitary pads, soap, toothbrushes, toothpaste, and other personal hygiene items, to protect them against receiving the same items in exchange for sex.

592 community members became members of 74 Savings for Transformation groups, saving money collectively to improve their economic situations and reduce the financial incentives of child marriage.

KEY LEARNINGS

Increasing community support of child protection—through in-person and radio messages by community members and faith leaders—is crucial in providing a safe environment, especially in the midst of a pandemic.

Kenya’s Department of Children Services (DCS) has been key in helping us train a child protection volunteer in each of the 20 wards in West Pokot County, where DCS is understaffed. We connected with volunteers virtually.

Effective community campaigns on COVID-19, child protection, and school enrollment came about through strengthened partnerships with Kenyan ministries of health and education, DCS, AACs, and others.

LIFE-OF-PROGRAM UPDATE

PLANS FOR THE NEXT SIX MONTHS

Our focus going forward includes designing and planning for the start of Phase 2 of the project in FY22. At the same time, we will continue our Phase 1 work, which includes training community members to champion and become mentors in Empowered Worldview, a faith-based approach to helping communities shift from a mindset of dependency to one of empowerment. We also will work on finalizing value-chain mapping and market assessments; engaging in government forums to promote services related to child protection and livelihoods; training project staff members and faith leaders on Channels of Hope, an approach to address child protection and gender issues; and training parents on Celebrating Families.

THANK YOU

With your support, we can dream big to help more children in Kenya escape FGM, early marriage, and other forms of abuse. Thank you for partnering with us to change attitudes and behaviors, while offering hope for a better future.

“Rael (above, receiving sanitary pads) is an excellent example of people living with a disability who, through contact with the project, have [been] supported in terms of empowering them to remain resilient and focused on making their lives better.”
